At-Risk Populations: All cattle breeds have genetic abnormalities, which can be rare, lethal, or in some instances, beneficial. In addition, genetic variants in purebred cattle can be inherited by composites that contain the at-risk breed. For instance, SimAngus cattle might carry Angus or Simmental genetic defects but will only carry one copy of the gene. Therefore, commercial producers who utilize crossbreeding can reduce the risk of cattle carrying two copies of the gene, affecting their calf crops, if they know the status of their cattle.

If parentage verification is desired, the parentage verification details must be completed. Parent Verification is used to verify the parent(s) of an offspring through their DNA. Both Sample Barcode¹ and Animal ID² must be provided for all parents used for parentage verification. If a potential parent is registered, their Registration ID should also be provided.

If a potential parent has been tested through a breed association only, contact that association and request a release of the parentage markers in writing (include at least 2 identifiers submitted when the animal was tested). The written release should be sent to DNAhelp@neogen.com. If the release is not completed before order submission, the parent may not be included for parent verification, and an additional fee may apply to re-run parent verification.

If a sample is not on file, a new one must be submitted before analysis can be completed. If this is not done prior to test completion, an additional fee may apply to re-run parentage verification.

¹Sample Barcode is the number associated with the Tissue Sample Unit, hair card, or blood card for that animal.

²Animal ID a visual ear tag or animal name that identifies each animal on the operation. Ex: 923 and should match the ID that was submitted when the animal was tested.
